Forecast for Wednesday 14 Dec 2022

Weather: Frequent snow showers expected overnight for more northern ranges and continuing during the day, a few bright or sunny spells in places but showers may band into longer spells at times. Further south towards Glen Shiel and Glen Affric will be dry with a few brighter spells. With strong northerly winds blizzard conditions are a possibility in the north and a severe wind chill is expected. Showers becoming heavier and more frequent again in the evening.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 800m: 50% low cloud around showers, best chance of brighter conditions for southern ranges.

Low cloud and visibility: Scattered or broken cloud layers above 400m can be expected for areas in the north around Torridon and Caithness hills in wintery showers, further west and south cloud bases will be scattered above 700m in any showers. Visibility will be good out with showers but turn very poor in wintery showers with the potential for whiteout conditions in heavy showers, full winter clothing is advisable and good navigation equipment.
